'STILL A LONG WAY TO GO' TO CLOSE GENDER PAY GAP, EXPERT WARNS

Today, November 22, marks the point in the year at which women stop earning money professionally, when compared to their male counterparts.

The day, known as 'Equal Pay Day', takes into account wage disparity by gender, and essentially shows that women 'work for free' from the start of the year, if their wages are compared to those of men.

The gender pay gap is the difference between the average pay of men and women, expressed as a proportion of men's pay. This year's gender pay gap of 10.7% for full-time employees has been calculated on November 22.

According to the Office for National Statistics, the average full-time male worker earned £57,400 last year, compared with £51,400 for women. This represents a 10.7% gap. The gap has widened since 2010, when it was 10.1%.

Data also indicates that women are earning less than men in most sectors, with the largest gaps seen in the public sector and health services.

Before, to improve the gender pay gap, the government has introduced measures such as the Gender Pay Gap Reporting Regulations, which require large organizations to publish their gender pay gap data.

The Fawcett Society Joins Forces to Close Gender Pay Gap

Years of advocacy and awareness campaigning have made the gender pay gap an entrenched issue, with recent figures showing that women in their 30s continue to earn less than their male counterparts. The Fawcett Society, a leading women's rights organization, has joined forces with the Gender Pay Gap Foundation to combat wage disparity.

Gender Pay Gap Foundation Unleashed to Combat Wage Disparity

In a move to address the issue of persisting gender inequality, recent figures unveil a troubling trend: women are earning an average of £4,000 less per year than their male counterparts. This wage disparity underscores the urgent need for proactive measures to close the gender pay gap. The Gender Pay Gap Foundation, established to foster equality and eradicate wage inequality, is working closely with established organizations to implement tangible strategies to dismantle the gender pay gap in the workforce.

WOMEN IN 30S ON AVERAGE £4,000 A YEAR WORSE OFF SINCE 2010, FIGURES SHOW

Women in their 30s are on average £4,000 a year worse off since 2010, according to new figures from the Office for National Statistics. Data from the Office for National Statistics shows that those aged 30 to 39 have lost an average of £4,000 in real-terms wages since 2010, leaving them, on average, £51,400 a year worse off than in 2010. The analysis was made using the average change in earnings and services. The figures show that women staying in their 30s are trying to get on the property ladder, get other things sorted, and worry about their children's education. The Conservatives' report compares earnings for people in Jersey have risen by 2% in real terms since June 2020.

Mothers earned £4.44 an hour than fathers in 2023, finds analysis

The "motherhood penalty" is wreaking havoc on women and the economy, according to campaigners, as fresh analysis reveals that the pay gap between mothers and fathers in the UK has grown by nearly £1 an hour since 2020. The analysis of the hourly earnings of mothers and fathers, released on Women's Day, found that on average mothers earned £4.44 an hour less than fathers in 2023 – a "motherhood pay penalty" that has found. The analysis compares ONS data from January to March 2020 to the same period in 2023 – found that the median hourly earnings of mothers compared with £14.04 for mothers and £14.48 for fathers in 2023.
